TORNADOES

By GEORGE FITCH, Author of "At Good Old Siwash,"

A tornado is a meteorological brain- citizen, leaving him arrayed in his polistorm. It comes mostly in June when political conventions and other convulsions of nature are pientiful, and is possible of mournful farmers hunting for misplaced houses, harns, collars, and sorting out tangled fences and county lines.

When a tornado visits a town it only stays a minute or two, but it is mentioned for years, and every one remembers of the control of the con

The tornado makes its lair in the Mis-slasippi and Missouri valleys as a rule. It is a grizzly gray greenish cloud with a long funnel attachment which extends the scenery with avidity. This funnel whirls at the rate of 11,000,000 revolutions a minute, and as it proceeds across the country it picks up farmhouses, chickens, locomotives, churches, haystacks, school paling the haystack on the church steeple, picking the feathers from the chickens and mixing them with $5 bills, it deposits the mess in the next county in a forty-acre stand of wheat, folds up its funnel, and goes away to take an-other bits out of civilization somewhere else. You can follow the path of a tor-nado across a whole State by the things which aren't there. Even a city detective could do it. Tornadoes rise in the Southwest and proceed Northeast, like Senator Bailey, leaving horror and despair in their wake Like Nero and other pitiless monsters, they are frivolous by nature, and love to stout door on top, but cannot be argued horrors, such as blowing wheat straws no tornado has ever met Col.
